Managing Discipline A Two-Day Workshop

Purpose of this Training

To understand and learn skills in applying discipline in the workplace

Participants Learn...

- ...the true meaning of discipline and how it applies in a team based work environment
- ...how to improve performance by taking a positive approach to discipline in the workplace
- ...the appropriate role they should fill in administering discipline
- ...how their organization's corrective action components and practices compare to sound discipline principles
- ...how to confidently handle discipline situations
- ...how to effectively manage people who are often identified as problem employees

Why this training is important?

Discipline is often looked at as a negative element in dealing with people in organizations. But in truth, establishing sound disciplinary processes that begin with education in the appropriate behaviors and performance is one of the key approaches to creating a culture of self-discipline. Managers must have the skills for holding others accountable. This may include taking corrective action in the case of continuing performance or behavioral problems. High Performance Organizations have high expectations and standards, high levels of empowerment, and accountability, not permissiveness.
